RECENT QUESTIONS ON MIGRATION

There has been a growing focus on migration in the social sciences in the last few decades. As a result, migration related researches in the field of cultural anthropology have been conducted in Hungary as well. Motives, forces and resources behind migration are so varied that it often proves difficult to find common features.

Nevertheless, certain questions concerning the transformation of our global society through migration may arise. More than that, migration does bring about new social challenges in terms of maintaining transnational relations or local integration. How do members of different groups cope with such challenges? What is the role of the nation state in the global process? How can civil society apply anthropological knowledge in its local integration activities? These are the questions that will be discussed on our next session after two presentations about two different aspects of migration in Hungary.
